1. Prior to June 1954, work establishments had accepted women for employment only on production of a medical certificate, issued free by the Health Center, stating that they were not pregnant. At the beginning of June 1954, the Ministry of Health sent instructions to the Health Centers forbidding the issue of such certificates, and women are now accepted for employment even if they are pregnant.
2. Since the beginning of June 1954, the railway communication system has been broadcasting on station loudspeakers an appeal to women to report for work in various branches of the railway service.
